Reading K-12 Standards

As the young adult author Walter Dean Myers famously stated in almost every interview, “Reading is not optional.” In this age of information, students and employees must be able to read detailed, complex text to interpret the world around them. Be it the literary world, the natural world, the academic world, or the work world, “Reading is a matter of survival” (Smith, 2014). Understanding that reading is a key skill to accessing knowledge, the standards committee focused attention on building a strong progression of standards from Kindergarten to twelfth grade that develop students’ ability to think critically about what they read. These reading standards are based on the understanding that direct, explicit instruction of language and reading leads to strong confident readers who are able to:

- Make inferences in increasingly complex text and logically explain their thinking behind the inferences;
- Determine central ideas of texts, unpack the development of the ideas, and summarize key aspects of a text to show the relationship between the details and the central ideas;
- Analyze how and why ideas, events, and characters develop and interact over the course of a single text;
- Interpret the explicit and subtle uses of language to shape meaning;
- Analyze how form and structure contribute to meaning-making;
- Assess how point of view, perspective, and purpose impact the development of a text;
- Integrate and evaluate content in diverse media formats and analyze the impact on a text;
- Evaluate arguments and trace the key points;
- Analyze ideas across texts and time;
- Build knowledge from content-rich nonfiction; and
- Consider alternate and opposing interpretations of text.

As with the other strands, the focus in elementary is on the foundational skills married with the reading skills. Middle school solidifies the foundation and continues to build reading stamina with increasingly complex literature and literary nonfiction, and the high school standards focus on the students’ ability to recognize archetypal patterns, nuances of language, and intertextual connections.

In addition, when analyzing the Reading standards, Reading Standard 10 is integral to understanding the other nine. The basic skills for reading are addressed in the Foundational Literacy standards, and the skills for comprehension are embedded in the Reading standards. Furthermore, the skills are applied to grade level texts. Reading Standard 1 for both Literature and Informational Text are the building blocks for the teaching of the other standards because it focuses on the students’ ability to make inferences and to cite the evidence that leads to their inferential thinking.

Literature and Informational Text in the English/Language Arts Classroom

Elementary students (K-5) interact with an equal division of time in literature and informational text. Secondary students (6-12) focus on literature and literary nonfiction in the English classroom. Because secondary schools departmentalize by content area, the emphasis on reading informational text is divided across the specialized disciplines. Through careful attention to word choice and structures in literature and literary nonfiction, students can:

[become] fluent in the decoding processes [enabling them] to allocate the time and attention necessary to process the ideas, information, story, and intellectual arguments and assumptions presented.....For that reason, readers must engage in an active construction of meaning, in which they grapple with the text and apply their earlier knowledge as they question, analyze, and probe. In the process, they learn to build knowledge and go beyond the wisdom of the author to think their own thoughts (Woolf & Barzillai, 2009).

| Background to Guide Decision-MakingStudents need to experience a range in text variety, complexity, and length. As teachers wrestle with the percentage of time, they focus not on the formula, but on the intention of using a balance of informational texts to build background knowledge to lead into and/or supplement a more complex anchor text. Units of texts need to be thematically aligned to support the development of background knowledge, which supports comprehension. |                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                     |

If our students are to graduate with the requisite reading skills, then the foundation must be established in the early grades, with emphasis on print concepts, phonological awareness, phonics and word recognition, word composition, and fluency. These foundational skills paired with the Reading standards will develop readers who can decode words and sentences with automaticity, so they can derive context and make meaning of a text that they read.

Ultimately, the act of reading is a cognitively demanding skill. With careful guidance and instruction, students can fluently read words and sentences, so they can have access to the world of ideas presented to them in print.

Speaking and Listening K-12 Standards

Speaking and listening skills are necessary for young people to be successful in the post-secondary, workforce, and creative endeavors they pursue. To this end, the Speaking and Listening standards serve as a bridge between reading and writing skills: in the ELA classroom, students share their understandings and ideas gleaned from reading and develop their written voice through presentations, public speaking, and participation in classroom discussions. These speaking and listening skills—like reading and writing skills—are founded upon the belief that students must “have words in order to use words.” Thus, the K-5 Foundational Literacy standards work in conjunction with the K-5 Speaking and Listening standards to help young students build their skills in understanding spoken words and sounds, speak in complete sentences, ask and answer questions, and describe and report on topics. In addition, the Speaking and Listening standards emphasize that students, across grades K-12, will be able to:

- Participate in a range of conversations and collaborations with varied partners, building on others’ ideas and expressing their own clearly and persuasively;
- Present information/ideas formally and informally in such a way that others can follow a line of reasoning;
- Effectively integrate information from appropriate diverse formats;
- Evaluate a speaker’s point of view; and
- Make strategic use of digital media.

Effective speaking and listening skills are necessary in today’s job market. According to a 2015 Job Outlook survey—conducted each fall by the National Association of Colleges and Employers to forecast hiring—employers from 260 organizations nationwide are looking for leaders who can “work as part of a team” and “communicate effectively” (NACE, 2014). 77.8% of survey respondents indicated “the ability to work in a team structure” was important, and 67% of respondents indicated “verbal communication skills” were important in their hiring decisions.

To be a team-player and communicate effectively, young people must be able to do exactly what the Speaking and Listening standards require. In 2013, Forbes magazine contributor Jacob Morgan reported that the future of work is collaborative. Morgan provided examples of companies like ING Direct Canada, where “employees have no offices. Anyone can talk to anyone and leaders focus on removing obstacles instead of creating them.” At another financial-services company, the Motley Fool, “employees play collaboration games to help work as a team, and have mobile desks that they can relocate in their office.” The world of work as we know it is changing, and young people must have strong and effective communication and collaboration skills to be considered employable.

Speaking and listening skills also aid reading comprehension and encourage engagement with texts and ideas. Researchers have long suggested a link exists between oral language and reading comprehension and that high-quality peer discussion and exploration of ideas—not just the presentation of high-quality content by the teacher or text—are central to the developing understandings of readers and writers.

Writing in 1948, Benjamin Bloome suggested discussion aids student problem-solving. In 1969, Britton suggested the concept of “talking to learn,” and in the 1970s, Vygotsky suggested cognitive growth “is more likely when one is required to explain, elaborate, or defend one’s position to others, as well as to oneself; striving for an explanation often makes a learner integrate and elaborate knowledge in new ways” (1978, p. 158). In a 1991 study of 58 12th grade students, Sweigart found that small-group discussions of nonfiction were superior to both lecture and whole-class discussion in helping students recall and understand essays they read. In 2006, Nystrand reported that a meta-analysis of 49 studies examining the effects of various types of small-group discussion approaches to high-level thinking and comprehension found that, “in the most productive discussions, teachers retained considerable control of text and topic while allowing students considerable interpretive flexibility and the opportunity to elaborate their ideas for extended periods of time” (p. 398). In research on whole-class discussion, Van den Branden (2000) found that discussion promotes reading comprehension when problematic and difficult passages are the focus of sustained interaction. Van den Branden also found that discussion benefited both fluent and limited English proficient speakers.

Long-standing, rigorous research supports the fact that discussion significantly supports literacy skills, and employers want to hire young people who can be team-players and communicate effectively. The Speaking and Listening standards afford opportunities for young people to develop and practice the skills needed to successfully pursue post-secondary, workforce, and creative endeavors.

Writing K-12 Standards

Tennessee students matter, so writing must matter if young people are to graduate from high school and be successful in the post-secondary, workforce, and creative endeavors they pursue. To this end, the Writing standards support a progression of skills from Kindergarten through 12th grade that help all young people develop into the writers they need to be in the 21st century. These skills are founded upon the belief that students must “have words in order to use words.” Thus, the K-5 Writing standards work in conjunction with the K-5 Foundational Literacy standards to help students build their skills in understanding print concepts, spoken words and sounds, and writing words and sentences. In addition, the Writing standards emphasize that students, across grades K-12, will be able to:

- Recognize and write in various modes, for different purposes, including to support and sustain an opinion or argument, to inform, and to express and reflect;
- Understand the relationship among writing task, purpose, and audience;
- Understand writing occurs through a process, and utilize a process that includes planning, revising, editing, and rewriting;
- Use technology to communicate effectively and to produce and publish writing;
- Understand writing can be used to answer questions, and participate in short- and long- term research and inquiry projects;
- Use evidence to support claims and convey ideas in writing;
- Integrate and synthesize others’ ideas into writing; and
- Write often to develop fluency, confidence, and stamina.

Ultimately, the Writing standards convey the importance of writing, for multiple and varied purposes and audiences. Writing is important because Tennessee students need to write effectively to gain and keep meaningful employment. According to a 2015 Job Outlook survey—conducted each fall by the National Association of Colleges and Employers to forecast hiring— employers from 260 organizations nationwide are looking for leaders who can “communicate effectively” (NACE, 2014). One of the biggest groups of survey respondents (73.4%) indicated “written communication skills” as a skill/attribute most looked for in potential hires. In Writing Next: Effective Strategies to Improve Writing of Adolescents in Middle and High Schools, a 2007 study on the state of writing in our schools, the authors explain, “Writing well is not just an option for young people—it is a necessity.

Along with reading comprehension, writing skill is a predictor of academic success and a basic requirement for participation in civic life and the global economy” (p. 3).

But writing is also important for other reasons. Writing is a tool young people can use to influence others. Books like Rachel Carson’s Silent Spring changed the way we think about human impact on the environment. George Orwell’s 1984 introduced us to such terms and concepts as “Big Brother” and “doublespeak,” and continues to encourage us to consider the effects of censorship, surveillance, and nationalism today. In addition, as technologies and social media become more integral to and ubiquitous in daily life, we communicate with others and represent ourselves through writing more than ever.

As Graham and Harris (2013) remind us, young people also write “to ...tell stories, create imagined worlds, explore who we are,...and chronicle our experiences” (p. 5). Kelly Gallagher (2015) suggests that narrative writing can be important to the social development of young people. He explains “when students write their way into imaginary worlds...they benefit from giving careful consideration to the decisions, the relationships, and the actions of others. When students are...writing narratives, they are in the process of re-creating themselves” (p. 106). In addition, research has shown that writing can benefit us psychologically and physiologically (Graham & Harris, 2013; Smyth, 1998).

Writing also makes young people better readers. In their 2010 report, “Writing to Read: Evidence for How Writing Can Improve Reading,” Graham and Hebert connect writing to reading comprehension: students better understand material they read if they write about it. This works in several ways. First, writing provides students with a tool for visibly and permanently recording their thoughts and ideas about a text and analyzing, connecting, personalizing, and manipulating key ideas from text. This has a strong impact on making text more memorable and understandable for students. Second, knowledge about text structure and organization is improved by having students engage in the process of composing text (Tierney & Shanahan, 1991). Writers gain insights about reading by creating text for an audience to read. When they write, students must make their assumptions and premises explicit as they observe the rules of logic, making them more aware of these same issues in the material they read. In a 2011 meta-analysis of the impact of writing and writing instruction on reading, published in the Harvard Educational Review, Graham and Hebert report that increasing how much students write and implementing process writing approaches in the classroom improve student reading comprehension.

Writing is important, for many reasons, but as recent ACT data and the 2004 Writing Next report suggest, every year in the United States, too many adolescents graduate from high school unable to write at basic levels, and too many adolescents drop out of high school because they lack basic literacy skills.

Tennessee students matter, so writing must matter. The Writing standards recognize that reading and writing are interconnected processes that begin with the foundation of letter, sound, and word recognition and composition. The Writing standards encourage students to practice and build on these foundational skills as they also write in a variety of modes for a variety of purposes; synthesize ideas across multiple texts; use textual evidence to support claims made and ideas conveyed in writing; and demonstrate sophisticated understandings of the relationship between usage and style. As these skills increase and progress, students grow as writers—and readers—who are able by grade 12 to accomplish a variety of writing tasks required by post-secondary, workforce, and creative endeavors.
